

PROTECT YOURSELF AGAINST PAYMENT RISK

Buyers beware! Bankruptcies are becoming a common thing in China and generally in the Far East. With global economic slow down more and more factories will take this route, sometimes a supplier may ask you for a deposit (usually 30%) before he accepts the order. While this is not unusual between long-standing trading partners, if you are doing business with the supplier for the first time, make sure you have done sufficient background checks on the supplier before you agree to the deposit, or ask for a different payment method, such as a letter of credit. If the seller seems more focused on payment than any other issue, or indicates cash payment must be made urgently, more caution should be given to the transaction. Be extra cautious when the seller asks you to send money to an account whose real owner cannot be traced; for example, you cannot trace the real name of a person behind an account with a wiring service such as Western Union. MARC always prefers LC to TT deposit it may cost in bank charges but at least you have some control, or just leave it to MARC ~ Someone you can trust!
